The Department of Health and Human Development is committed to upholding the academic standards of the Academy. Students should be well-versed with the Academy’s statements entitled “Honesty” and “Academic Honesty”, which are published in The E-Book. Consistent with these policies, we expect students to maintain the highest level of integrity by being fully honest in their verbal and written work, and giving appropriate credit when utilizing others’ ideas or work.

Dishonesty in assignments, quizzes or tests, or other academic work is a serious offense and may lead to significant academic and/or disciplinary consequences. To be certain that they are complying with these policies and standards, students should only submit work that is their own, unless they are explicitly instructed to work with a partner or team. In those cases, work should be divided equally, with specific credit given for each part. When writing or talking about others’ ideas, students should be sure to reference the sources and provide proper citations. When in doubt, students should consult with their Health and Human Development instructor.
